Suspected Brentwood-Darlington shooter nabbed; now cops seek the

by: PETER KORCHNAK - Volunteer Gus Shaffer serves a sample of a local microbrew to a visitor at the Westmoreland Brewfest, as the event organizer and owner/brewmaster of Portland U-Brew & Pub, Jason Webb, looks on.

What was called the Westmoreland Brewfest took place on August 17th and 18th at the Portland U-Brew & Pub, on S.E. Milwaukie Avenue at Tolman Street, in celebration of the brewpub's first anniversary.

Neighborhood resident Gus Shaffer, who volunteered on Saturday as server, highlighted the event's local character: "The festival specializes in presenting breweries from within a few miles' radius," Shaffer explained.

The nearby Philadelphia's presented two beers, while the Burnside, Coalition, Commons, Gigantic, and Upright breweries presented one brew each. In the pub itself, an additional eight offerings from the on-the-premises brewery were on tap, including a barley wine aged especially for the occasion for six months.

According to Jason Webb, P.U.B.'s owner and brewmaster, "The goal of the festival is to invite people who have never been here to see what we do. There's also no other brewfest in this area this time of year."

Webb added that he was encouraged by the turnout. He plans to organize the festival in August and October every year, serving seasonal brews each time.

"We'll have bigger brews in the fall," Webb said.

The adjacent San Felipe Tacqueria supported the friendly neighborhood atmosphere on Portland U-Brew and Pub's back patio with treats from its grill. Guitarist Whiskey Jim underscored the brewfest's feel, when he capped his set with Neil Diamond's "Sweet Caroline", rousing the audience into singing along, "Good times never seemed so good."
